Orbite and Xponential Space Announce Strategic Partnership to Bring Astronaut Training and Space Travel Experiences to Latin America

Cape Canaveral – May 2025 – Orbite, a pioneering leader in the space tourism industry, and Xponential Space, a company dedicated to space commercialization, have announced a strategic partnership to bring exclusive spaceflight experiences to Latin America.

This partnership marks a significant step in democratizing access to space, offering individuals and organizations across the region the opportunity to train like astronauts and prepare for the rapidly growing commercial spaceflight industry. Through immersive programs at Orbite's state-of-the-art facilities, participants will undergo high-fidelity space training, including microgravity simulations, high-G force conditioning, and mission planning, setting the stage for the next generation of Latin American space travelers.

"Latin America's access to hands-on space experiences has remained limited. Our partnership with Orbite will change that," said Ignacio Krasovitzky, Founder and CEO of Xponential Space. "We are excited to bring world-class astronaut training and space travel opportunities to the region, inspiring individuals and organizations to engage with the space economy like never before."

Orbite's training programs are designed for both aspiring astronauts and those seeking unparalleled high-performance experiences, blending luxury with cutting-edge spaceflight preparation. With space tourism and private astronaut missions on the rise, this collaboration ensures that Latin America has a direct gateway to the future of human space exploration.

"At Orbite, we believe that the path to the stars begins with inspiration here on Earth," said Nicolas Gaume, President and Co-Founder of Orbite. "Partnering with Xponential Space allows us to connect with the passionate space community in Latin America and extend our unique astronaut orientation and space experiences to new frontiers."
